Fukuoka Food

Hakata Ramen

Hakata Ramen is widely known as the specialty of Fukuoka. It features a richly flavored white pork bone soup and thin noodles. It is common to order a noodle refill(kaedama) in Hakata to enjoy the leftover soup. Ramen is the perfect dish after drinking.

Mizutaki

This typical Fukuoka local cuisine is over 100 years old. This hot pot (nabe) involves a painstakingly prepared broth extracted from chicken. The chicken's flavor blends into the lightly seasoned soup, which is a delicious treat on its own. Mizutaki is found on Fukuoka dinner tables all year round, not just in winter.

Hakata Udon

Jotenji is a temple in Hakata Ward, which was founded by Shoichi Kokushi (a monk of the Rinza school) in 1242. It is known as the birthplace of Udon and Soba noodles and you can find a stone monument in the premises. It has been said that the monk brought back the technique for milling flour from the continent and introduced the culture of powdered food all over Japan.

Seafood Dishes

Seafood in Fukuoka is all fresh and cheap as the town is facing the sea! You can try many types of seafood and fish and compare the taste! There are many sushi restaurant serving fatty fresh seafood and Izakaya where you can enjoy gomasaba (mackerel seasoned with soy sauce and sesame), one of the specialties of Fukuoka!

Motsu Nabe

Motsu Nabe is a favorite local hot pot dish that is popular for its rich flavor. It is not just for cold days. In fact, the real pleasure of this famous dish is eating it while sweating on a hot summer's day. Because it has a lot of vegetables in it, motsu nabe is loved for its healthiness and reasonable cost in addition to its flavor, and at one time even sparked a culinary craze all over Japan.

Yakitori

Yakitori restaurants in Fukuoka have unique features. They serve cabbage with special sauce before you order, and items other than chicken such as beef, pork and seafood. You might be surprised if you see the showcase of ingredients at a restaurant.
